

United Kingdom
Mission to the United Nations

Statement by James Kariuki, Deputy Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland Mission to the United Nations on the introduction of the proposed programme plan and budget for 2022

13 October 2021

Mr Chair,

Thank you to the Secretary-General for joining us today to introduce his proposed programme budget for 2022. I would also like to thank the ACABQ and the CPC for their work reviewing it and for providing recommendations to the Fifth Committee ahead of its own consideration of the proposed budget.

Member States have a duty to the UN and the people it serves to ensure that the Organisation has the right level of resources needed to carry out the mandates we give it, in particular in support of the 2030 Agenda.

We will evaluate the budget proposals carefully. Programmes must use resources efficiently and effectively, using innovation, data and continuous improvement to enhance performance and mandate delivery. We will hold the Organisation to account for how it has used, and will use resources to deliver tangible results. The UN must demonstrate how it is using taxpayers' money to make a difference.

The United Kingdom commends the Organisation on its response to the COVID pandemic, and welcomes how the reforms you implemented helped it do so. Last year, the General Assembly asked the Secretariat to factor lessons learned from new ways of working into this year's budget. We look forward to seeing how it has done so for next year and beyond. The United Nations must continue to modernise. We welcome UN efforts to build back better, including by identifying more cost-effective ways of implementing mandates. At such a critical time, we encourage it to go further so that every dollar – or pound - the United Nations spends has the greatest impact on the ground.

In his Common Agenda report, the Secretary General argues for more predictable and sustainable funding for UN work. While we support this goal, simply shifting more activity onto the regular budget is not the solution, especially at a time when nearly all member states' national budgets are under pressure due to COVID and in light of the systemic budgetary shortfalls the Organisation has faced for decades. We call on all member states to pay their assessed contributions on time and in full. We would also remind member states of the need to focus the work of the UN on the areas that need it most - something we have all committed to as part of General Assembly revitalisation. The Organisation must be allowed to use its resources more flexibly and prioritise more effectively for greatest impact.

Mr Chair,

This is the third year that we will consider an annual programme budget since adoption of General Assembly resolution 72/266. The United Kingdom remains a firm supporter of the Secretary-General's reforms, including the move to an annual budget. Next year we will review its implementation. We encourage the Secretary-General to present a robust, evidence-based case for making it permanent: including, where necessary, proposals that could further improve the process.

Finally Mr Chair, I would like to assure you and the Secretary-General of my delegation's commitment to work constructively with all delegations to reach a good and timely outcome on the 2022 budget.

Thank you
