I. Introduction

1. By its resolution 66/294, the General Assembly decided to establish, at its sixty-seventh session, an ad hoc working group on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly, open to all Member States:

(a) To identify further ways to enhance the role, authority, effectiveness and efficiency of the Assembly, inter alia, by building on progress achieved in past sessions as well as on previous resolutions, including evaluating the status of their implementation;

(b) To submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its sixty-seventh session.

2. The resolution also decided that “the Ad Hoc Working Group shall continue its review of the inventory of General Assembly resolutions on revitalization annexed to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group submitted at the sixty-third session of the Assembly¹, and, as a result, issue an updated version of the inventory to be attached to the report of the Ad hoc Working Group at its sixty-seventh session”. The present report and the recommendations contained herein are submitted pursuant to that provision.

3. During the sixty-seventh session of the General Assembly, the President of the Assembly appointed Ambassador Mootaz Ahmadein Khalil, the Permanent Representative of Egypt to the United Nations in New York, as Chair of the Ad Hoc Working Group.

4. Before the formal beginning of its work, the Chair of the Working Group conducted informal meetings with various Member States and representatives of a variety of political groups. During those meetings, the Chair benefited extensively from the insights and the ideas of Member States on both the substance and the technical and procedural aspects of the revitalization process.

II. Proceedings

5. The Working Group held six meetings, on 2 April, 29 April, 7 May, 10 May, 10 June, and 25 July 2013.

6. The programme of work was organized in two practical stages, as follows: (a) general discussion and exchange of views; and (b) thematic meetings. The themes identified by the Chair for consideration in the four thematic meetings comprised:

- (a) The role and authority of the General Assembly and its relationship with other principal organs of the United Nations and other groups outside the United Nations;
- (b) The working methods of the General Assembly;
- (c) The role and responsibility of the General Assembly in the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads of the United Nations system;
- (d) The functions of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, including strengthening its institutional memory, as well as its relationship with the Secretariat.

A. General discussion

7. The first meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group was convened by its Chair on Tuesday, 2 April 2013, with the participation of the President of the General Assembly. Following opening remarks by the President and the Chair, fifteen delegations participated in the debate, a number of them on behalf of political groups.

8. In his opening remarks, the President of the General Assembly indicated that he had asked the Permanent Representative of Egypt to take up the Chairmanship of the Working Group and help him in the critical endeavour of revitalizing the work of the General Assembly. Among major challenges facing the Assembly, he cited the ongoing effort to define the post-2015 development agenda as one of the most critical tasks, arguing that “the international community has rarely done anything quite so difficult”. He focused on “the fact that, last June in Rio, world leaders tasked the Assembly to assume primary responsibility for conceptualizing a universal transition to sustainability”. Emphasizing that “this is a strategic issue of the first order”, he urged Member States to “define and adopt the Sustainable Development Goals, agree on options for financing them, and conceive a workable plan for monitoring their implementation”. Moving to the practice of thematic debates, he highlighted the unique opportunity these presented for Member States to exchange views, noting “there should be no taboo subjects in the General Assembly, especially in the context of thematic debates.” Touching upon the budget of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, the President expressed his view that the current apportionment was “manifestly inadequate”, adding that, the post of President of the General Assembly being “perhaps the most important multilateral post for which most small and medium-sized countries have the opportunity to run”, no Member State should be “constrained by the possible financial implications of victory.” He thus appealed to the Working Group “to make a strong recommendation to level the fiscal playing field by calling for a larger allocation of funds from the regular UN budget.” In conclusion, he stressed that “the process of revitalization can help lay the foundation for a grand re-organization of human affairs and ensure the General Assembly becomes the key source of legitimacy for the international community”, eventually becoming a “true, universal Parliament of Nations”.

9. The Chair at the outset assured the Working Group of his commitment to perform his task “in an open, transparent and pragmatic manner, benefiting from the membership's views and ideas, in order to reach a fruitful outcome of this process." He encouraged delegations to review the Updated Inventory Chart, which should be used "not only as an inventory but rather as an indicator of the level of achievement that clearly identifies what has been fully or partially implemented, or not implemented at all." In line with this approach, the Chair proposed to split the Chart into two sections, separating provisions that required follow-up from those that had been implemented or were being implemented on an ongoing basis. Sharing specific ideas and suggestions on the various clusters "in order to kick-start the Working Group's discussions", the Chair: encouraged the AHWG to "identify additional areas of potential cooperation and coordination between the principal organs"; proposed a designated high-level segment of the General Assembly in spring of each year that would help alleviate the burden on the programme of work in September; and asked how the Assembly's working methods could be made more efficient while reducing costs and achieving savings in resources. Further, he wondered how coordination could be increased between the Office of the President of the General Assembly and the Executive Office of the Secretary-General; and how the General Committee could be rendered a more effective mechanism in assisting the President in coordinating the activities of the General Assembly. In addition, he urged those present to clarify "the issue of rotation among various regional groups for the position of Secretary-General". In conclusion, the Chair suggested that the Working Group could "lead by example in issuing a concise resolution on revitalization that builds on previous resolutions while avoiding repetition and redundancy."

10. Statements of delegations in the subsequent exchange of views focused on the four thematic clusters: the role and authority of the General Assembly, its working methods, the selection of the Secretary-General and strengthening the institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly. Many speakers again underlined the importance of the implementation of existing resolutions already adopted on revitalization and welcomed the circulation by the Chair of the Updated Inventory Chart, which had been revised pursuant to resolution 66/294. One delegation took this opportunity to underscore that "no other weakness of the General Assembly undermines its relevance or effectiveness more than the failure to implement its resolutions." Another welcomed the Updated Inventory Chart and hoped that it would lead to increased implementation.

11. Regarding the role and authority of the General Assembly, one group denounced what it perceived as continued encroachment by the Security Council on "issues which clearly fall under the powers and prerogatives of the General Assembly", including in "areas of norm-setting, legislation, administrative and budgetary matters, and establishing definitions." One member of this group was specifically concerned that the Security Council's "gradual but constant encroachment" on the General Assembly and ECOSOC was most acute "in the area of norm setting" and needed to be countered and corrected there foremost. The same group also cited the work of the Special Committee on the Charter and on the strengthening of the role of the organization, which it thought "could contribute greatly to the whole process of revitalization", in particular with respect to the functional relationship of the principal organs. Another of its members issued a call to reinvigorate the work of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, the C-34, insisting as well that the Assembly "already has a vital role in peace and security—and we need to be more assertive in assuming it". The group moreover emphasized that the objective of revitalization should continue to be the strengthening of the Assembly's role and authority, "bearing in mind that the improvement of its procedural and working methods is only a step in that direction." It therefore once again reaffirmed the role and authority of the General Assembly, including in questions related to international peace and security, emphasising the Assembly's "intergovernmental, inclusive and democratic character." In this regard, it also drew attention "to the necessity to consult with Member States on the initiatives and activities undertaken within the Organization."

12. A different group, for its part, reiterated its commitment "to efforts aimed at strengthening the role and authority of the General Assembly in line with the Charter and the relevant resolutions, and based on realistic assessment and effective use of available funding". One delegation, while also supporting such "realistic initiatives", nonetheless cautioned that these "must be based on respect for the balance of functions of the principal organs", and another emphasized the co-equal status of the General Assembly and the Security Council. A subsequent speaker suggested that the work of the General Assembly and the Security Council should be "complementary, rather than competitive". Another underlined that the General Assembly could play an effective role in situations where the Security Council failed to act.

13. Commenting on the practice of holding thematic debates, one group confirmed that it "would very much welcome that the President put in place consultations with Member States on the possibilities for achieving, where appropriate, results-oriented outcomes" of them, and suggested that the President, at the beginning of every session, might recommend to the Assembly a programme for such debates. On a related issue, a group was supportive of "further improvement of information sharing" with regard to briefings by the President on his recent activities, including official travels, which continued to be an appreciated practice that served "as a valuable source of information and transparency for the wider membership."

14. On the second cluster, working methods, several delegations emphasized the importance of the General Assembly becoming more efficient and effective. In this regard, one group specifically looked forward to the briefings by the Chairs of the Main Committees. A number of delegations expressed their wish for a more streamlined agenda, which they argued would allow the Assembly better to focus its work on matters of common concern to the international community. This, they suggested, could be done by clustering, biennializing and triennializing items. In this context, one group specifically noted the importance of leadership by the President, as well as the Chairs and bureaux of Main Committees. One delegation also spoke in favour of a more streamlined and focused agenda, which, it underlined, should result in better highlighting questions related to development.

15. As to the scheduling of high-level meetings, it was suggested by one group that, "in order to assure true impact of these endeavours, their number and distribution throughout the year should be carefully considered". The same group suggested that "too high a number of high-level events can undermine their significance and lead to overburdening of the General Assembly's work programme." It therefore reiterated the "invitation to the Secretary-General, the President of the General Assembly, in particular in his capacity as Chair of the General Committee, and the Chairs of the Main Committees, in consultation with Member States, to enhance the coordination of the scheduling of high-level meetings, especially in the vicinity of the general debate.” A subsequent speaker, pointing to Heads of State and Government and Foreign Ministers’ dense schedules of bilateral meetings, also stressed the need “to lighten the high-level week” in September; high-level meetings, it argued, should be spread evenly over the session.

16. In other references related to working methods, there emerged a widespread desire to revisit and reconsider the current rotation schedule for the Chairs and Bureaux of the Main Committees, which was due to expire at the end of the sixty-eighth session. One group stressed particularly that it “would welcome further discussions and practical proposals on this matter”, a point supported by a number of delegations as well.

17. Another group, acknowledging “the very substantive historical memory of our deliberations” and arguing that it should be readily accessible, “as it would facilitate our preparations for each and every session” as well as “contribute to a better understanding of various positions and concepts”, proposed the creation of a website focused on revitalization that “could follow the [form and example of the] Main Committee websites and contain important related official letters and notifications to the Permanent Missions, statements, reports, resolutions, etc.” Also in the context of e-services, one group noted that “the ODS has been fully operational and accessible” and that “a range of options, including online access, knowledge management, and video training is being implemented through and by the PaperSmart team.”

18. Regarding the selection of the Secretary-General, a group and a number of individual delegations aligned with it reaffirmed that the appointment process should be more transparent and inclusive of all Member States, thus allowing an effective and efficient participation of the General Assembly. It also stressed the need for the full implementation of the relevant provisions in resolutions 60/286, 64/301 and 66/294, including at the next selection process of the Secretary-General. One speaker suggested that the current session provided a good opportunity for considering this issue, given that the next selection process was still some time away. It also expressed the hope that the Working Group’s report for this session could contain a clear encouragement for female candidates for the next Secretary-General. Another speaker stressed the need to follow strictly the Charter’s provisions.

19. Pertaining to the strengthening of the institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, several delegations stressed that financial considerations should not pre-empt any Member State from running for the post of President of the General Assembly. On a related note, one speaker made the point that an increase in the resource allocation would avoid “the President being dependent on contributions made to the Trust Fund.” One group generally highlighted the importance of “ensuring the effectiveness of the Office of the President, including through increasing its budget and strengthening its institutional memory”, and it recalled previous mandates for the Secretary-General to submit proposals, in the context of the programme budget for the biennium 2014-15, to review the existing budget allocation and to report on the Office’s funding and staffing. A subsequent speaker countered by recalling the need for the submission of such proposals to follow existing procedures (i.e. Fifth Committee and ACABQ) and suggested exploring options for providing support to the Office of the President from within the Secretariat, along the lines of the support provided to the Security Council by the Department of Political Affairs' Security Council Affairs Division. A later speaker also supported enhanced support from the Secretariat, which it saw as essential in light of the Office's enhanced workload, and it pointed to valuable tools such as the PGA Handbook as ways to strengthen institutional memory.

20. Finally, on a procedural note, a group of delegations and an individual delegation encouraged the President of the General Assembly, in light of the considerable work load before the Working Group, "to continue looking for a second Co-Chair", following past practice.

21. In his concluding remarks, the Chair thanked delegations for their active participation in the initial meeting and announced, in advance of the Group's next meeting, that he would circulate a background note regarding the proposal to convene a high-level segment of the General Assembly in the spring, following a request for clarification from a delegation. He also took note that there had been no disagreement on his proposal to split the Updated Inventory Chart into two sections, indicating that he would therefore proceed accordingly. The Chair also announced his intention to invite the Department of Public Information to brief the Working Group, in one of its forthcoming meetings, on ways and means to raise the visibility of the Assembly's work, and he also looked forward to the briefings by Main Committee Chairs on working methods. Having heard several delegations speak in favour of streamlining the agenda, the Chair invited delegations to come forward with specific proposals. On the selection process for the Secretary-General, he noted the need to adhere to the Charter. He also remarked on the suggestions put forward for reactivating the work of the General Committee.

B. Thematic meetings

First thematic meeting: the role and authority of the General Assembly and its relationship with other principal organs of the United Nations and other groups outside the United Nations

22. The Chair of the Ad Hoc Working Group convened its second meeting (which was also its first thematic meeting) on the afternoon of Monday, 29 April 2013 to examine issues related to "the role and authority of the General Assembly and its relationship with other principal organs of the United Nations and other groups outside the United Nations". In opening the meeting, he briefly presented the Updated Inventory Chart of resolutions on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly (the final version of which is contained in Annex I) to delegations. He flagged its posting on the website of the President of the General Assembly, underscored the division of its two parts and the nature of each, noted that it indicated that roughly "two thirds of the provisions have been implemented and one third need additional follow-up", and encouraged delegations to benefit from it.

23. Turning to the issue at hand, he spoke of the pressing need for “this universal body to play its leading role in global governance” and “to reactivate the relevant provisions of the Charter to become more relevant and effective”. Encouraging “mutually reinforcing and complementary relationship[s] between the principal organs”, he highlighted two such relationships specifically. In the area of peacekeeping operations, he spoke of the complementary roles and responsibilities of the General Assembly and Security Council; turning to the post-2015 development agenda, he spoke of the importance of cooperation between the Assembly and ECOSOC. Looking further afield, he observed that relationships with groups outside the UN and with the public at large both needed to be strengthened, not least from the standpoint of increasing the visibility of the Organization and understanding of its work. Civil society, non-governmental organisations, and the private sector all were and would be key to success in this. Following his remarks, 14 delegations took the floor, two of them on behalf of groups.

24. Taking up one of the Chair’s main points, one group agreed on “the importance of close cooperation and coordination among all principal organs”, commenting that it was “essential for this organization to work in unison”. Because of this, it was “deeply concerned that encroachment was widespread”, focusing extensively on the balance between the General Assembly and the Security Council on peace and security issues. It spoke of the Council’s Annual Report to the General Assembly specifically, urging the Council to make it “more comprehensive and analytical”, and calling for the institution of the informal meetings held during its preparation by the President of the Security Council with all Member States. Referring to the Update Inventory Chart, it noted that “no special subject-oriented reports ha[d] been formally submitted” to the Assembly and commented that “[they] regret that”.

25. One speaker urged that “the Assembly should take the lead in setting the global agenda” and that the Security Council “should stop its efforts to redefine its competence”. Another “condemn[ed] the usurpation of the Assembly’s mandate by others”, warning directly against “minimizing its importance or achievements”. Yet another offered two suggestions: that the Assembly needed to “increase its promptness in taking decisions on issues of peace and security” and that it “need[ed] to concentrate on crucial issues”. A subsequent speaker, suggesting that “role and authority are best enhanced through increased efficiency and transparency”, supported “an open and transparent relationship” between the Assembly and the Security Council, but was “concerned by efforts to change this co-equal relationship”, particularly through the Assembly’s involvement in the Council’s working methods. On this point, a later speaker was vehemently “against reallocating to the Assembly the prerogatives of any of the other organs, including the Council”. Regarding peace and security issues, it “insist[ed] on the mandatory nature of the Charter’s provisions”, and, as regarded the Council’s Annual Report, it argued that the Security Council was “doing what [could] be done to improve it, and this effort at greater transparency need[ed] to be noticed”. On the second of these points, a subsequent speaker stated that this was the Council’s “duty”, citing Articles 15 and 24, and suggesting that the Council’s “compliance [was] merely formal, rather than substantive. Despite progress, we still need a more analytical report.” Concurring, another delegation, also referring to Article 24 and agreeing that the Report needed to be more analytical, further insisted that it needed to account for “situations in which the Council failed to act”. Another, acknowledging that the Assembly’s “role in regard to the promotion of peace, security, and development ha[d] lagged behind improvements in organizational structures, management practices, and administrative procedures”, urged that “we must take steps to resolve the perceived tension” between the Council and the Assembly. ...The starting point for the Assembly is the full use of the enormous space it has been given by the Charter. Weak action in the Assembly will lead to involuntary outsourcing of its responsibilities. ...The Assembly has addressed ...issues of peace and security, and opposed aggression and the use of force whenever—as happened often in the Cold War—the Council was paralysed by partisan votes.”

26. Regarding collaboration and relationships with “other groups outside the United Nations”, one group, recalling that the Assembly was “the primary legislative body in the multilateral system and [that] this position...should be respected”, commented that it would “follow discussions around [this] issue closely”. A subsequent speaker renewed both its objection to the phrase and its request for its deletion, prompting the Chair to explain that the phrase had been inserted “precisely to emphasize the nature of the Assembly as more democratic and inclusive”. Another group found “the interaction between the General Assembly and international or regional fora and organizations” to be of “high importance” and “support[ed] dialogue between the United Nations and the G20” in particular. It encouraged “efforts aimed at increasing visibility and transparency of the General Assembly’s work” equally strongly, arguing that “outreach towards the outside world would “undoubtedly contribute to strengthening the General Assembly’s role” and visibility. It also specifically supported the PGA’s briefings to the membership. Later, a delegation, equally supportive of these briefings, also urged that there be more briefings by the Main Committee Chairs, and that specific outreach efforts to civil society and the private sector be further enhanced as well.

27. One group expressed support for thematic debates, but “ideally upon previous consultation with Member States, and focused, where appropriate, on result-oriented outcomes”. It recalled an earlier recommendation that “at the beginning of each session, the General Committee, following a recommendation from the President, shall recommend to the General Assembly a programme of, and format for, interactive debates on the items on the agenda”, suggesting that the Working Group might explore this further. It also urged a “qualitative rather than quantitative approach to high-level events [and] the coordination of the scheduling of them, particularly ...near the General Debate”. Another delegation praised not only the thematic debates, but also the role of the President in them, specifically commending the large part of the session that he had spent in New York and comparing it to “the travels and foreign visits” of some of his predecessors. Yet another speaker urged that the thematic debates “be rationalized. They are not really interactive, nor do they [yield] real results.” This speaker also suggested that more attention be given to their follow-up, and to the scheduling of those slated to occur around the General Debate. Later, another delegation posited that the Assembly had become “overburdened” with and by the thematic debates, which had become “lost in the flow”, proposing that it might be more useful and productive to cluster these in a “Spring Session of High-level Meetings”.

28. A number of other specific proposals were made in the course of the meeting. One speaker suggested that “for every resolution, the Secretariat may submit, within a specific timeframe, a report on the ‘status of implementation’. This should include information on the reasons for non-implementation or delay in implementation. A special unit could be created within the Secretariat for such follow-up and review... located within the Office of the President of the General Assembly.” This same speaker suggested that the Ad Hoc Working Group should “examine the possibility of convening a high-level meeting in the near future” to “explore new ideas on how to bring more vigour, visibility, and attention to the revitalization debate”. Near the end of the meeting, a different delegation brought up another matter that it felt weighed upon the role, authority, and “transparency” of the Assembly: the election of the Main Committee Chairs. The cycle of rotation mandated by resolution 48/264 was coming to its end, and there was a need to make provisions and “set out clear rules and mechanisms in transparency”.

29. The Chair, in closing, took note of this point. He also noted that delegations reaffirmed the importance of enhancing the role and authority of the General Assembly as the most democratic and universal body in global governance. He stressed that the relationship between the General Assembly and other principal organs of the United Nations is complementary and not competitive “We are all in the same Organization. Member States are the same in any principal organ”. The Chair expressed interest in the suggestion regarding the timing of the thematic debates, feeling that “organizing these so they don’t surround the General Debate could make them more interactive and effective”. An additional week of high-level meetings in March, April, or May could alleviate pressure during the high-level segment in September.

30. The Chair was also gratified by the number of speakers who had commended the Updated Inventory Chart—some of whom had made use of details in it to support arguments they had made in the course of the meeting. It was intended to be “user-friendly”, and the Chair hoped that it would “help us do our best to improve the implementation rate”. He had also been heartened by the commitment of delegations “to addressing our shortcomings”. He noted the support expressed for partnerships with civil society.

Second Thematic Meeting: the working methods of the General Assembly

31. The third meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group, (which was also its second thematic meeting) began on 7 May and focused on the working methods of the General Assembly. (It continued on 10 May to exhaust its list of speakers). Pursuant to operative paragraph 19 of resolution 66/294, the meeting also heard briefings by the Chairs of the First, Fourth, Second, Third and Fifth Committees, as well as the Vice-Chair of the Sixth Committee, on discussions held by them on working methods in their respective Committees during the 67th session. At the same meeting, the Chair also circulated a non-paper on enhancing the coordination of the scheduling of high-level meetings at the United Nations (attached hereto as Annex II) and a background note on the rotation pattern for the election of the Chairs of the six Main Committees (attached hereto as Annex III).

32. In his opening remarks, the Chair welcomed the presence of the Chairs of the Main Committees, and briefly recalled a number of proposals that had been put forward by Member States in the course of the Working Group's deliberations thus far, including the proposal to create a dedicated website to focus on the institutional memory of the GA revitalization process and the proposal to consider replacement of the expiring rotation pattern for the election of the Main Committee Chairs. The Chair encouraged delegations to lead by example through presenting to the Ad Hoc Working Group or to the General Committee items co-sponsored by them for possible streamlining. The Chair also reiterated his call for the Working Group to lead by example in agreeing on a concise resolution that would avoid duplication by building on existing mandates and by being action-oriented. Referring to the distributed documents, he briefly introduced his non-paper and background paper and also proposed to further restructure the Updated Inventory Chart to align its currently three-fold structure with that of the Working Group's four thematic clusters according to previous resolutions on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly.

Briefings by Main Committee Chairs

33. The Chair of the First Committee highlighted that the 67th session of the Committee had benefited from rationalization and streamlining measures implemented over the past 20 years, including: the grouping or merging of related agenda items; biennial and triennial consideration of some items; and ordering the items and sub-items before the Committee under seven broad topics or "clusters". It had also benefited from the establishment of a deadline for the submission of draft resolutions and decisions; the introduction of thematic debates for a more focused discussion of disarmament issues; the streamlining of the stages of the Committee's work; improved coordination of its meetings with those of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee); and the establishment of a dynamic web portal. Collectively, the various measures taken to rationalize the working methods of the First Committee had enabled it to develop greater organizational clarity, to be better focused in its deliberations, and to make a more efficient use of the resources allocated to it. The Chair also observed that it was incumbent on Member States to continue to ensure that draft resolutions were "concise, focused and action-oriented". In addition, he recalled that the High Representative for Disarmament Affairs had pointed out that the response rate to GA resolutions requesting the Secretariat to collect data and information from Member States was very low. The Chair also underlined the importance of the early election of Main Committee Chairs and emphasized that the three month delay in electing the Chair and bureau for the sixty-seventh session had set the Committee back. With respect to modern technologies, First Committee delegates were increasingly relying on Quickfirst as their main source of information. Gradually, more use was being made of electronic copies of documents rather than hard copies. On the other hand, when the Committee considered a proposal for PaperSmart operation during the sixty-sixth session, put forward by the Chair at that time, no consensus had been reached due to concerns raised by some delegations. Finally, during the sixty-seventh session, Hurricane Sandy had severely disrupted the thematic debate segment, and the Committee had therefore adopted the Chair's proposal that all speakers take the floor for just one minute and then forward their prepared statements to be posted on the First Committee portal, QuickFirst. This approach, known as the "Sandy Formula", was adopted without setting a precedent, and it had enabled the Committee to make up the three days lost to the storm and to conclude its work on 7 November 2012, as originally scheduled.

34. The Fourth Committee Chair at the outset highlighted the Committee's wide of scope of work, which was due in part to the historic merging, in 1993, of two pre-existing committees, namely the Special Political Committee and the Fourth Committee (Trusteeship Committee)². In contrast to other Main Committees, the Fourth Committee took action on draft resolutions submitted under each item or cluster of items during the course of the session after the conclusion of the general debate on those items. A particular practice of the Committee was the hearing of 'petitioners', who speak on some of the sixteen Non-Self-Governing Territories under its consideration. In order to enhance the interactive nature of the Committee's meetings, interactive dialogues with high-level representatives of the Secretariat were held. The Chair noted that participation in these interactive segments had varied widely at the sixty-seventh session and stressed that more active participation in these interactive segments could contribute to a more lively debate. At its sixty-seventh session, the Fourth Committee Bureau and the Committee as a whole considered its methods of work, but they did not decide to biennialize or triennialize any of the other items on the Committee's agenda. In this regard, the Chair recalled that the Committee considered reports of six subsidiary bodies, which themselves met annually. Taking into account the particular nature of the remaining items, it did not see any possibilities for further clustering of items at this stage. The Chair also underscored his concerted effort to start meetings on time and keep within the official meeting times, in this way making the most efficient use of the resources allocated to the Committee. Time limits and deadlines for inscription in speakers lists were strictly observed. Through such measures, it had been possible to reduce the number of scheduled meetings of the Committee. The addition of a new item – "Comprehensive review of special political missions", at the sixty-eighth session, however, would necessitate the addition of two meetings to the programme of the Fourth Committee for that session. The Chair also recalled that, as decided by the General Assembly, the meetings of the Main Committees had been webcast during the sixty-seventh session, which, he noted, had contributed to transparency. Documents (both formal and informal) were regularly posted on the Committee's password-protected website. The Secretariat also maintained a mailing list and took a proactive approach in sending regular emails to delegations regarding the work of the Committee. In conclusion, the Chair noted that the delay in the election of the Chairs and other officers of the Main Committees of the sixty-seventh session had proven detrimental to the organization of work, and that the early election of the Bureaux of the Main Committees, as foreseen by the General Assembly, would greatly facilitate the preparation for each session, including interaction with the Committee secretariat, and allow for a better handover from the outgoing Bureau to the incoming Bureau.

35. The Chair of the Second Committee noted that over the last few years the Committee had undertaken significant steps towards improving its working methods, culminating in the adoption of decision 65/530. In implementing the suggestions made by Member States at the Committee's sixty-sixth session, the Bureau had decided to allocate time at the beginning of the sixty-seventh session to discuss the Committee's working methods at an informal meeting on 4 October 2012. An informal paper resulting from this meeting was expected to be circulated to the Second Committee Members on Quickplace, and it would highlight, among other things, the following elements: observance of deadlines for the submission of draft resolutions; proper drafting of resolutions in accordance with the recommendations contained in the pertinent General Assembly resolutions; possible merger of recurrent resolutions of the same cluster that presented similar or homogeneous content, with the ultimate objective, in some cases, potentially being to have omnibus resolutions that would address the concerned agenda items in a comprehensive and coherent manner. Furthermore, agenda items of single clusters could be reorganized, especially after a major United Nations conference. Also, Quickplace could be operationalized throughout the year and not be restricted to the main part of the General Assembly session. The Chair of the Second Committee noted, in addition, that the Committee had continued its unique tradition of holding special events on key issues and emerging challenges in development, designed to inform the work of the Committee and bring it into contact with new and cutting-edge thinking from leading figures in academia and development practitioners. The Committee had also continued the practice, which had begun at the sixty-sixth session, of holding joint events of the Second Committee and the Economic and Social Council, which underscored the importance of and need for systemwide coherence. The Second and Third Committees, furthermore, had held a joint informal meeting on "Communication for Development: Using ICT and broadband to accelerate social and economic development", the first meeting of its kind. The Chair noted that the issue of the organization of the list of speakers remained to be resolved in the Second Committee, with the Committee deciding the inscription of the European Union on a case-by-case basis for each agenda item. As this continued to be a delicate matter, with the potential to impede the smooth functioning of the conduct of work, a common understanding and agreement on how best to address it for all the Main Committees could be beneficial. On a general note, this was the first session when the Secretariat had begun posting the list of speakers for each item on Quickplace a day before consideration, and this had been very well received by Member States. The unfortunate delay in the election of the Chair and bureau for the sixty-seventh session, however, had had a negative impact, affecting, among other things, the selection by the Bureau of facilitators (involving approximately 35 delegates), the decision-making process in relation to the number and focus of the special events, and the ability of the Secretariat to secure high-level, qualified panellists for these events on short notice. At the Committee's informal meeting on improving its working methods, delegations had emphasized that the discussion on merging and biennialization and triennialization of resolutions, as well as clustering/reorganization of agenda items, should informally begin well before the start of the session, and that such discussions ideally should take place in May-June within the Bureau-elect and, if necessary, with major groups. Accordingly, the Bureau-elect needed to be in place well before the start of the session and there also needed to be a seamless link between the incoming and outgoing Bureaux. In this regard, the Ad Hoc Working Group might fruitfully consider having the Main Committees elect their Chairs and Bureaux for each forthcoming session at the last meeting of the current session of the Committee, before the closure of the main part of the General Assembly. The Bureau-elect thus would be in place at least ten months ahead of the start of the session.

36. The Chair of the Third Committee made his presentation to the Working Group on the basis of a Conference Room Paper³ that contained a report on the methods of work of the Third Committee. The Chair focused particularly on the elections of the Chair and Bureau, as well as on the agenda and Quickplace, among other issues. He reaffirmed the Committee's practice of having the Chair elected on the basis of geographical distribution, as well as its practice of having the Rapporteur elected on the same basis. The Third Committee also elected its bureau three months in advance, so that it might discuss the organization and division of work as well as consider the programme of work immediately thereafter. Given this, the incoming Bureau should continue to meet with the outgoing Bureau to consult and review issues relating to the efficient functioning of the Committee's work. Regarding the agenda, it had undergone several changes since the adoption of resolutions 45/175 and 50/227, with the most recent additional item being that of the "Report of the Human Rights Council." Whereas all items allocated to it were considered on an annual basis, the submission of some reports and draft resolutions has been biennialized. Several items have been clustered, and others were considered in joint debate. The Committee would continue to consider the further biennialization, triennialization and clustering of items, in consultation with Member States, while taking into account the relevant recommendations of the Ad hoc Working Group. Since the Committee held individual general discussions on each item, further rationalization by clustering or joint consideration would be desirable, as it would free up time for delegations to negotiate the text of draft resolutions. Turning to QuickPlace, the Chair noted that its increased use had greatly facilitated the smooth and timely conclusion of work, and he suggested that the website of the Committee should continue to be improved on a regular basis. When reports were not available in all official languages within the six-week rule, every effort should be made to make them available in their unedited advance version, in English only, on the website of the substantive Department. On an organizational note, however, the Bureau and delegations had expressed concern at the lack of availability of rooms and Secretariat support during the peak times of informal consultations on draft resolutions. It was therefore advisable to review the support given to the Secretariat of the Third Committee so that it might adequately reflect requirements, in terms of office space and equipment, whether in the North Lawn Building or elsewhere, following the completion of the Capital Master Plan. Finally, the Committee should also consider closer cooperation and collaboration with other Main Committees to identify and address issues that were also under consideration in those Committees, while respecting divisions of responsibility. In conclusion, the Chair of the Third Committee underscored that the Committee should continue to examine ways to revitalize its work and to keep the Working Group informed on any decisions in this regard.

37. The Fifth Committee Chair, who underlined the Committee's traditionally dense workload, singled out two issues in his remarks that had had a particularly important impact on the work of the Fifth Committee, namely the availability of documentation and the time management of meetings. He underscored that the timely availability of documents that were before the Committee was of utmost importance and noted the efforts that had already been undertaken, including the establishment of a documentation focal point in the Department of Management who worked in very close contact with the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management. Finding ways to further enhance the timely issuance of documentation could have a direct impact on the Fifth Committee's programme of work. Secondly, as regarded the time management of the meetings themselves, the Fifth Committee during the sixty-seventh session had tried to limit night and weekend meetings as much as possible, while endeavouring to start meetings strictly on time. There was a tendency in the Fifth Committee to avoid parallel meetings in order to ensure the full transparency and inclusiveness of all consultations. Another measure that could help reduce the length of meetings was to suggest time limits for briefings from the Secretariat. On other issues, the question of the speaking order had not yet been fully resolved, and the Chair suggested that this was a task for the regional groups. He also noted the important role social media could play in increasing the visibility of the work of the Fifth Committee. In conclusion, the Chair of the Fifth Committee emphasized the importance of the early elections of the Main Committee Chairs and their bureaux, which, he believed, would enhance the predictability and organization for the forthcoming session.

38. The Vice-Chair of the Sixth Committee focused his remarks on two issues, namely on the planning of work and on the PaperSmart mode of servicing meetings in the Sixth Committee. As to the former, he reiterated the concern of overlapping scheduling of meetings in the Sixth Committee and the plenary on items of a related nature, and he suggested that further steps could be taken to address this duplication, which presented a problem of participation for Sixth Committee delegates. Second, he noted that the PaperSmart pilot had been adopted by the Sixth Committee for its sixty-seventh session and underlined that it had been well received by delegations overall, not only for reasons of cost-effectiveness but also because of the efficient access to information it provided.

Interactive Segment

39. Following the briefings by the Main Committee Chairs, the Chair opened the floor for an interactive segment of comments and questions from delegations. All speakers demonstrated strong interest in the views of the Chairs of the Main Committees on further streamlining their agendas and periodizing their resolutions. One group underlined the need to address the question of the expiring rotation pattern for the election of the Chairs of the Main Committees and underscored the importance of electing their bureaux at least three months in advance, so as to allow for adequate preparation and exchange of lessons learned from one session to the next. A number of questions, mainly addressed to the First Committee Chair, touched on the preferability of adopting resolutions by a vote or by consensus and on whether the number of annual resolutions could be reduced. One delegation also pointed out that progress had already been made in making the work of the Assembly more efficient, but less so in making it more effective, especially if the latter were measured by the rate of implementation of its adopted resolutions.

40. In response to these questions, the First Committee Chair noted that attempts had been made to streamline the Committee's agenda for the past twenty years, but that this had proven difficult because of the ownership of certain draft resolutions. Speaking to the question of effectiveness, he added that "the follow-up to resolutions was sometimes worrying", with the response rate by Member States being "minimal". From a substantive perspective, the membership in the First Committee was divided in attaching different degrees of importance to either nuclear disarmament or non-proliferation. Striving for consensus on all the resolutions before it was therefore something difficult to imagine in practice. The Chair of the First Committee, on this point, instead spoke out in favour of the existing practice.

41. The Chair of the Fourth Committee also noted that any attempt at avoiding repetition of resolutions was a highly political endeavour, noting sponsors' desire to see their initiatives being reiterated every session. This point was echoed and reinforced by the Chair of the Second Committee, who emphasized that Member States' prerogatives were well established. The Third Committee Chair, however, argued that the Secretariat could further improve the streamlining, and synchronizing, of the Committee's work with that being undertaken in Geneva (by the Human Rights Council). The Vice-Chair of the Sixth Committee focused his response on the question of consensus versus vote, underlining that voting was more a question of the democratic rights of Member States than one of time management. In fact, the Sixth Committee operated, as the Vice-Chair pointed out, on the practice of adopting resolutions by consensus, though this could mainly be attributed to the legal nature of the Committee's focus. Regarding the suggestion of "one-off resolutions", the Vice-Chair argued that this would be "a big change" at the United Nations, though in practice it rarely happened. He also noted the practical elements associated with repetitive resolutions, which often contained important updates or mandates.

Statements/Debate

42. In general statements, twelve delegations intervened, including on behalf of groups. Whereas one group reiterated its position in principle that "the process of revitalization of the General Assembly as the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations and its position in the wider United Nations system, including aspects like working methods that appear to have a technical dimension, is of a political nature", another put forward its understanding of revitalization as meaning "a General Assembly more streamlined, more accountable and more effective at dealing with the issues currently on its agenda", an effort in which enhancing the efficiency of its working methods was key. One delegation similarly emphasized that it considered that streamlining and prioritizing the Assembly's agenda and enhancing its efficiency should be the Working Group's highest priority, while another concurred that, though revitalization ought to be a political process, inefficiencies nevertheless needed to be addressed where they existed.

43. Regarding streamlining the agenda, including through biennialization and triennialization of items, one group attached greatest importance to further considering this issue, including through considering the introduction of a sunset clause. It suggested that each of the Main Committees, their Chairs, and their bureaux should have an active role to play in this, recalling the earlier recommendation from the Working Group that the General Committee, meeting in open-ended consultations, should also consider the further biennialization, triennialization, clustering and elimination of items. It further noted that, since then, "the General Committee has made no such recommendations to the General Assembly." A subsequent speaker also favoured the inclusion of a sunset clause and encouraged Member States to exercise greater discipline in tabling draft resolutions, including by discontinuing resolutions on “outdated and obscure topics”. Overall, it stressed that the General Assembly should focus more on “issues of relevance”, and it supported clear timelines for Working Groups to finish their work. Another delegation proposed looking critically at the extensive reporting requirements stemming from many resolutions and suggested that it might be best “if they were not tabled every year”. But another group, commenting on these same issues, strongly emphasized that any streamlining of the Assembly’s agenda, including the introduction of sunset clauses, “should be conducted with a clear consent of the co-sponsoring State(s) and/or the States concerned by the topic of the item.” One of its members specifically stressed that, while some may consider some agenda items and resolutions as less important and not to be given the level of attention they currently enjoy, others might feel differently. Another member of this group emphasized that “no irrelevant issues are discussed in the General Assembly”. Noting that some Main Committees’ programmes of work were partly organized on a biennial and triennial basis, the group underscored the intergovernmental nature of discussions by the Main Committees of their working methods. Another of its members, highlighting the importance of implementation, reiterated its suggestion that a special unit, located in Secretariat or in the Office of the President of the General Assembly, might be tasked to submit, within a specific time-frame, a status of implementation report for every resolution adopted, including an indication of non-implementation.

44. With reference to the rotation pattern in the election for the Chairs of the Main Committees, one delegation put forward a detailed proposal (attached hereto as Annex IV), on the argument that “a simple extension of the current pattern set out in resolution 48/264 [would] not be enough”. This proposal envisaged, inter alia, rotation among all regional groups, and a strong role for the President of the General Assembly and the General Committee in the “process of forming the bureaux of the Main Committees.” Another delegation, however, suggested that the sixth chairmanship among the six Main Committees could continue to rotate among the three numerically largest regional groups. One group pointed out the necessity of streamlining the current arrangement, “to make the rotation scheme more transparent and predictable.” Similarly, another group stressed “the necessity to prepare as soon as possible a fair, transparent and balanced medium-term rotational arrangement for chairing the six Main Committees” and called on the President of the General Assembly to take strong leadership in this regard. Other speakers also underlined the need for more predictability in the election of the Main Committee Chairs.

45. On the scheduling of high-level meetings, one group emphasized that “high-level meetings held on the basis of mandates from the General Assembly and thematic debates give more visibility to very important topics, among which a majority are of the utmost importance to developing countries” and expressed appreciation for the active role taken by the Secretariat in providing advice to ensure optimum scheduling of these meetings. This group was open to considering proposals aimed at further enhancing the coordination of high-level meetings, including the allocation of one or two weeks dedicated expressly to them, bearing in mind the technical feasibility and the need to facilitate the full participation of Member States. Another speaker, noting that excessive numbers of high-level meetings devalued their importance and underlining the need not to overburden the period of the general debate itself, supported spreading such meetings over the course of the entire session and looked forward to discussing the Chair's non-paper. Other delegations were also open to the idea of setting aside one week during March or April for this purpose. For its part, another group reiterated the invitation to the President of the General Assembly, in particular in his capacity as Chair of the General Committee, and to the Main Committee Chairs, in consultation with Member States, to enhance the scheduling of high-level meetings, especially in the vicinity of the general debate, suggesting that the Working Group could also contribute "with indicative guidance in this regard." One speaker expressed caution and stressed the need for "the careful consideration of the pros and cons" of a separate springtime segment, which was echoed by others who remained "to be convinced of the utility [of introducing] a separate high-level week during the spring."

46. Touching on balloting and voting in the General Assembly, one group supported any technical improvements in principle but recalled that no option thus far presented had met the requirements of reliability, credibility, integrity and confidentiality and that, consequently, no formal decision had been taken by the General Assembly. This group therefore underlined that "the development of electronic devices related to the voting and balloting systems within the framework of the Capital Master Plan could not be invoked in itself to urge Member States to adopt these systems." On the other hand, another group reiterated the importance it attached to improving the existing balloting system and adapting it to modern technologies. It was thus looking forward to updates from the Secretariat on any new technological developments that might be relevant, bearing in mind concerns expressed about security and confidentiality.

47. Finally, on the distribution of documents and the use of modern technologies, one group noted with appreciation the efforts made by the Secretariat to reduce the distribution of paper versions of official United Nations documents to the Permanent Missions and proposed that the savings thus realized could be used to further improve the quality of these documents, taking into account requirements for availability in all official languages. This group furthermore urged that greater use be made of the internet "so that it becomes the main paperless and cost-effective channel of timely information and distribution of documents". It also reiterated, in this context, its proposal for a dedicated website on revitalization. Other delegations were also supportive of further enhancing the use of modern technology in making information available to delegations by electronic means. Yet, while acknowledging the importance of cost savings and reduced environmental impact, another group nonetheless stressed that better e-services should not be interpreted as an alternative to the issuance of hard copies of Secretariat notifications and all other relevant documentations. These, it insisted, must be distributed in paper format, particularly all the important official communications that must be transmitted both by email and by fax.

48. In his concluding remarks, the Chair thanked the Main Committee Chairs for their very useful briefings, underlining the importance of exchanging best practices. Summarizing the main points made in the debate, the Chair invited delegations, and the Working Group itself, to lead by example, including by proposing items co-sponsored by them for possible streamlining. Recapitulating the various statements and proposals made, and the background note circulated regarding the rotation pattern for the election of the Chairs of the Main Committee, the Chair, urged delegations and regional groups to consider this issue further also called for the timely submission of candidatures for the forthcoming elections of the officers of the Main Committees for the sixty-eighth session, to facilitate its timely organization. On the issue of balloting, the Chair indicated that he had received confirmation from the Secretariat that, since it had previously reported on this issue, during the sixty-sixth session, there had been no technological developments that met the criteria of credibility, reliability, and confidentiality as defined in operative paragraph 24 of resolution 66/294.

Third Thematic Meeting: the role and responsibility of the General Assembly in the selection and the appointment of the Secretary-General, as well as in the selection of candidatures for other executive heads of the United Nations system

49. The Chair of the Ad Hoc Working Group convened its fourth meeting on the afternoon of Friday, 10 May 2013. Following remarks by the remaining speakers of the second thematic meeting, on the working methods of the General Assembly, the Working Group devoted the remainder of the afternoon to its third thematic meeting, on the role and responsibility of the General Assembly in the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads of the United Nations system.

50. In his opening remarks, the Chair outlined the issues and history of the selection and appointment process and urged delegations to present “concrete and practical” proposals regarding it, benefiting from the Updated Inventory Chart. Following this, thirteen delegations took the floor, two of them on behalf of major groups. Many of these welcomed and commended the timing of this meeting at this particular moment, observing that it would “allow an appeased and dispassionate debate on this topic, since the next process of selection and appointment [would] not be initiated [for] a few years”. One delegation stressed that it would be “very useful to continue to review experiences now in light of the next selection process”.

51. The majority of speakers explicitly reaffirmed and supported both Article 97 of the Charter and related provisions in General Assembly resolutions. While one group found resolution 11 (I) of 1946 “outdated”, suggested that it had been “completed and partly amended” by subsequent resolutions on the issue, and pointed explicitly to it as a means by which the Security Council had “assumed too large powers in this matter over the years and encroache[d]... on the role of the General Assembly concerning this matter”, another group listed resolution 11 (I) specifically among those to which it “attach[ed] paramount importance to the full implementation of the provisions”.

52. One delegation, emphasizing that the Security Council and General Assembly had “a co-equal role” and insisting that “the Charter must not be altered”, favoured “the broadest membership gaining the views of candidates through established mechanisms”. It insisted that Article 97 specified “a clear process” and “establish[ed] an informal practice [through which] candidates have an opportunity to present their views, and Member States to hear them”. It encouraged candidates to engage Member States through these mechanisms and encouraged Member States

“to play an active role in these and ensure that candidates hear their views in turn”. While another speaker “support[ed] reasonable proposals”, it nevertheless “oppose[d] efforts to reallocate to the General Assembly the prerogatives of other organs”, insisting that this was “in violation of the Charter”. Favouring the current practice based on Article 97, it was opposed to changes to it but willing “to consider ways of optimizing it, including through more active use of the regional group format and nominations”.

53. A subsequent speaker agreed that “the distinct roles of the Security Council and the General Assembly were clearly explained in the Charter”. Another, affirming that all Member States “have a stake in the process” and encouraging the exploration of “ways to further involve the broader membership in the selection process”, nonetheless allowed that “the close working relationship between the Secretary-General and the Security Council makes it imperative that the members of the Council have full confidence in him or her”. A later speaker, stressing that “the role of the Secretary-General ha[d] grown widely”, found that this made it even more important “to obtain the widest support of Member States”. While “the spirit of Article 97 should be honoured”, cooperation between the Security Council and the General Assembly “should be encouraged”, it commented. Though another delegation insisted that “the selection process is too important to be left to the Security Council and [that] the General Assembly must have more say”, it also allowed that “this should not divide the two organs”.

54. A different delegation, suggesting that the Security Council had “taken on the practice of conducting autonomously” the selection and appointment process “on the basis of a mistaken interpretation of resolution 11 (I)”, called for the General Assembly “to reaffirm its greater role. This doesn’t mean changing the Charter..., but merely the implementation of [its] provisions”. Another speaker was also of the view that “we are not redefining the Charter, but respecting it, and we need to innovate while respecting it”. A subsequent speaker agreed, suggesting that, through its use of resolution 11 (I), the Security Council presented “only one candidate to avoid discussion or debate” on its choice, insisting that “times have changed”, and proposing a process “that should begin at least nine months before the end of the [sitting Secretary-General’s] term”. In it, candidates’ presentations to the Assembly would be followed by a question-and-answer period, the President of the General Assembly would give the Security Council a list of recommended candidates, the Security Council would select a number of candidates from these, and the General Assembly would make a final choice. Another delegation followed this by insisting that “Article 97 doesn’t close the door to the possibility of the Security Council presenting more than one candidate to the General Assembly”, arguing that “if Article 97 was so clear, why was resolution 11 (I) adopted? We can think only that clarification was necessary”.

55. One group, stressing that the selection and appointment process needed “to be more transparent, credible, and inclusive of all Member States”, also emphasized the importance of making the participation of the General Assembly in this process “more active, effective, and efficient”. Another, reiterating support for the same principles, underscored their importance in “ensuring that the candidates for the post of Secretary-General possess and display, inter alia, commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter..., extensive leadership and administrative and diplomatic experience”.

56. More specifically, a number of speakers focused on the role and possible activities of the President of the General Assembly in the selection and appointment process. One group encouraged him “to consult with Member States in order to identify and endorse [a list of] candidates” who could then be forwarded to the Security Council, further suggesting that, for this purpose, he could “convene hearings or meetings of the General Assembly for an exchange of views with all candidates”, thereby making the process more inclusive, transparent and credible. This group also underscored “the need for more specific timelines for the selection process and encourage[d] formal presentation of candidatures... in a manner that allows sufficient time for interaction” with Member States. Another group, agreeing that the President of the General Assembly “could play a role in this process, in particular in consulting with Member States,” also concurred that interaction with Member States “could be facilitated by the presentation of candidatures... in a manner that allows sufficient time for consultation”.

57. Another proposal put forward was that, “as the best way to inaugurate a gender balance in the access to the post” of Secretary-General, “regional groups involved in the next... selection process... [should] present only women candidates”. Listing other major international organizations that were or already had been headed by women, it suggested that the United Nations was “lagging behind” in this regard, but also clearly indicated that its suggestion was made “without prejudice to the sovereign right of Member States to present whomever they wish[ed] as a candidate”. One speaker, expressing “concern at the state of implementation of General Assembly resolutions on this”, noted that not only had there been no female Secretary-General to date, there had also been none from Eastern Europe. A subsequent speaker agreed that there needed to be “equitable geographical and gender distribution in this process”.

58. A number of speakers focused on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit⁴ and, more specifically, on its recommendation regarding the holding of hearings/meetings with candidates running for posts of executive head of organizations in the United Nations common system. One group suggested that this could improve the process, enhancing its transparency and credibility by making it more inclusive of Member States. A delegation welcomed “closer consideration of selection procedures... to ensure legitimacy, transparency, and balance”. Another acknowledged that it was “not appropriate to assign posts to countries”, but suggested that, “if there were to be geographical rotation, it should take place in a cyclical manner”. Taking note of the report, another group commented that it could “be noted that the report state[d] that] the selection process of the Secretary-General [was] unique in comparison with that of the other executive heads, given the role of the Security Council and, in particular, of its permanent members”.

59. A number of speakers lamented the low rate of implementation of these provisions and resolutions generally. One accused them of constituting “the most eloquent examples the failure of implementation and lack of transparency”, finding this “a cause for grave concern”, and suggesting that the General Assembly “should not approve another candidate until this change[d]”. Conversely, another urged “strict reliance on the prerogatives as established”, and yet another suggested that “these processes don’t lack transparency, but rather ensure due diligence”. The final speaker on this point, feeling that it was “possible to make progress in reforming and democratizing this process”, suggested that doing so “could open the door to newer and greater reforms in our Organization”.

60. In closing and summarizing the meeting, the Chair identified, as two of its principal leitmotifs, “the need for inclusiveness and interaction, and the need to implement our own decisions while respecting the provisions of the Charter”. He stressed that the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 97 of the Charter, reflects the complementary relationship between the General Assembly and the Security Council. The Chair further stated that the meeting had benefited from a range of views, on issues from the framework of the selection and appointment process to the principles that should guide it, to the roles of the organs and actors involved. These could help move the discussion—and the issue—forward.

Fourth Thematic Meeting: functions of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, including strengthening its institutional memory, as well as its relationship with the Secretariat

61. The Chair of the Ad Hoc Working Group convened its fifth on Monday, 10 June 2013. This meeting, which was also the fourth thematic meeting of the Working Group, focused on the “Functions of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, including strengthening its institutional memory, as well as its relationship with the Secretariat”. As foreseen, it included briefings by: the Senior Special Advisor to the President; the Assistant-Secretary-General in charge of the Capital Master Plan; the Under-Secretary-General of the Department of Public Information; and the Director of the General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division of the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management. These were followed by an interactive question and answer session between delegations and panellists, and subsequently by prepared remarks by nine delegations.

62. In opening the meeting, the Chair commented that many proposals already existed on strengthening both the Office of the President of the General Assembly and the support provided to it. Some focused on a model by which the Office and President would be supported by an entity modelled very much on the Security Council Affairs Division in the Department of Political Affairs. Others focused on strengthening cohesion and coordination between the principal organs, in various combinations and by various means. This issue had been a focus of the Working Group’s attention for a number of sessions, and he hoped that delegations would avail themselves of the presence of the presenters to engage in a lively and productive discussion on it.

63. On the Capital Master Plan, the Assistant-Secretary-General focused solely on the current phase of it, the restoration and renovation of General Assembly Hall. The purpose of this project was to improve both the functionality and security of the space, to bring it from a room built for sixty Member States in the 1940's to one equal to the needs and demands of 193 today. The restored Hall, which was slated to reopen in time for the 2014 General Debate, would be both more sustainable and more secure. Its finishes and carpets would match the originals; its famed Leger murals would be retained; more seats would be added for delegations and observers. New high-definition screens for both viewing and voting would be placed on either side of the podium, but take up much less space than those currently in use. Sound and video quality would both be enhanced, interpreters' booths would be upgraded, and electronic nameplates like those now in place in the conference rooms would also be installed. There would be real-time captioning, enhanced connectivity and videoconferencing capabilities, and greater accessibility, particularly to the podium.

64. Speaking on behalf of the President of the General Assembly, his Senior Special Advisor opened by providing an overview of the functions of the Office of the President and the demands upon it. He stressed the extent to which the "responsibilities and tasks" of the Assembly had "expanded continuously" since the adoption of the first resolution on revitalization⁵ in 1991. During the current session alone, nineteen Chairs had been named to facilitate different processes, and eighteen thematic meetings and special events had been organized. Further, four high-level meetings were currently in preparation for the beginning of the sixty-eighth session. In order to keep this pace, ensure effectiveness and efficiency, and maintain continuity, a number of things were required. Adequate staffing was key; four professionals were currently assigned to the Office of the President, but at least two more senior professionals were needed. Continuity was also vital, and the "Troika" of presidents that had previously been discussed should be re-examined. The Senior Special Advisor also suggested the possibility of extending the term of each President of the General Assembly to two years. Smooth transitions between presidencies were essential, and, in this context, the Senior Special Advisor urged institutionalizing the briefings provided to incoming presidencies. The support of the Secretariat was also pivotal, and he expressed the Office's strong appreciation for its collaboration with Department for General Assembly and Conference Management, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of Public Information, and other departments. Of crucial importance, however, was the budget: the Senior Special Advisor indicated that the allocated budget of $250,000 had not been raised since 1998, and noted that the Trust Funds' system of voluntary contributions (by which funds contributed could be earmarked) had received uneven contributions since its creation. The situation created by this was simply too unpredictable. The Senior Special Advisor recalled an earlier plea by the President of the General Assembly to "level the fiscal playing field" through "a larger allocation from the regular budget" to the Office.

65. Regarding Secretariat support, the Under-Secretary-General of the Department of Public Information recounted his department's efforts to tell the story of the United Nations in general and the General Assembly in particular "every day... in as many languages as possible, and on as many platforms as possible". Indicating the range of activities and programmes involved, from Headquarters to the department's sixty-three field offices, reaching non-governmental organisations, youth, and other sectors, he noted that many of his department's efforts to work with the Office of the President and promote its work were reflected in detail in the Updated Inventory Chart. He did, however, specifically flag the spokesperson that the Department of Public Information seconded to the Office of the President, the archival and institutional memory work done by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, and the online tools it was developing. These, he hoped, would help “ensure that [we] can tell the United Nations’ story as broadly and effectively as possible”.

66. From the perspective of the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management (DGACM), the Director of the General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division detailed the support provided to the Office of the President through staffing, funding, and substantive assistance. Regarding staffing, he mentioned the team of four professionals and one general service staff recruited by the President who were covered by the regular budget, as well as additional support provided by two further professionals and two general service staff within DGACM. In addition to these, he enumerated support provided by translators and text producers (through DGACM), a car and driver (through the Department of Management), a security detail (through the Department of Safety and Security), a spokesperson (through the Department of Public Information) and legal advice (through the Office of Legal Affairs). The total cost of these ran in excess of US$ 1 million. Given all the different kinds of support sought and provided, and the number of departments and budget lines involved, exact funding figures were difficult to track. This was further complicated by the fact that the term of each President was spread over two calendar years. Acknowledging the request to the Secretary-General in resolution 66/246 “to submit, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2014-2015, proposals to review the budget allocation of the President of the General Assembly, in accordance with existing procedures”, the Director linked it to ongoing efforts by the Secretariat to increase substantive support to the Office of the President within “the difficult financial situation that prevails”, mentioning as well the creation and utilization of the Trust Fund. Focusing further on substantive support, he underscored the work of the General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division (GAEAD), which he headed, in serving as “the dedicated central support office which furthermore represented the institutional memory” of the General Assembly and Office of its President. This support “encompass[ed] analytical, substantive, and technical support ...and include[d] background briefs on specific substantive, procedural, or technical questions. The division also advise[d] incoming Presidents on a wide range of issues related to the forthcoming session and facilitate[d] the transition period”. This substantive support was provided in addition to “a range of conference management and conference support services”.

67. In the interactive question and answer session that followed these briefings, one group focused immediately on the budget of the Office of the President, underlining the importance of ensuring that it was provided predictable financing. It recalled a reference in the original inventory chart annexed to A/63/959 to support being provided to “a limited extent”. This was not very clear, in its view. Did Member States need to formulate more specific language or requests? In response, the Director detailed the uses to which the discretionary budget of the Office (of roughly US$ 300,000, currently) was or could be put. He listed as well the kinds of support that were counted within the roughly US$ 1 million covered by the Secretariat, as well as those (like that of the 2 professional and 2 general service staff in the General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division) that were provided above and beyond it. He also underscored again that the four professionals and one general service staff selected directly by the President for his cabinet were covered by the regular budget. The Senior Special Advisor of the President commented that it was precisely the range and variety of sources of support to the Office that made a single, "centralized budget for the Office" impossible. As had been clearly shown by the Secretariat, support was provided by many different departments under many different budget lines.

68. The group that had raised this point also sought clarification on the earmarking of funds donated to the Trust Fund: did these give the Office of the President adequate flexibility? One delegation felt that it was important that Member States had more information on the Trust Fund, wondering whether its records were open and whether they showed which Member States had contributed and which funds were earmarked. Another expressed interest in knowing how contributions to the Fund had been used and which had been earmarked for what purpose. Overall, the Chair felt that there should be a means of tracing and tracking the total current expenditure for the support to the Office of the President from all the sources indicated, and he wondered also how much it varied between sessions. The President's Senior Advisor, noting that the Trust Fund was no longer empty and that a number of contributions had been made to it in the course of the current session, explained that these could be and often were earmarked to cover specific meetings, travel, or staff salaries, though some contributions were unencumbered. But the variability of this situation created, ironically, part of the unpredictability that made planning difficult for the Office of the President.

69. Another delegation wanted to know what needed to be done specifically to strengthen institutional memory, whether it could indeed be done within existing resources, or whether further funds or posts were required. In response, the Director of the General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division recalled the request that was being made for an additional P-4 who would focus solely on providing support in this area. Given the concern that Member States were expressing regarding the retention of institutional memory, it was hoped that they would consider this proposal favourably. The Under-Secretary-General of the Department of Public Information spoke of his department's ongoing efforts to secure institutional memory by archiving documents and broadcasts. It was developing new online services for easier access, and its transition to its new Media Asset Management System (MAMS) had begun only the week prior. The President's Senior Special Advisor strongly supported and commended such efforts, but added that "what we need in addition are high-level professionals with experience, and a nuanced sense of the issues. ...What we really need is two P-5s, rather than one P-4."

70. One delegation wanted to know how transitions were currently being managed. What was generally done? And what was the current Office of the President doing? Another turned to the issue of secondments: How were candidates selected? How was geographical balance ensured? Was secondment systematized, or done merely at the initiative of Member States? The President's Senior Special Advisor began by flagging one major problem affecting both staffing and budget: "entitlements for staff begin only on the first day of the session. For those asked to arrive 1-2 months earlier, it is up to their country to pay for that period." He noted that while some countries could afford such contributions comfortably, a number could not afford them at all, and this had an impact on the staffing of the office. Regarding secondments specifically, he explained that these were handled “bilaterally, with Permanent Missions”, noting that “colleagues have been chosen from a broad range of areas and regions”, and stating unequivocally that “we have been extremely satisfied with this arrangement and the staff who have joined us through it”. Expressing little enthusiasm for “establishing a system” for secondments, he commented that he did not “see how it would work”.

71. From a general perspective, the Chair wanted to hear the Senior Special Advisor’s assessment of the support that the Office of the President was provided by the Secretariat, as well as the Secretariat’s sense of the challenges it faced in providing that support. The President’s Senior Special Advisor responded by saying that the Office had worked closely with the Secretariat, “relied heavily on them”, and had “very good collaboration”. In response to the Chair’s second question, the Director of the General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division, focusing on a specific challenge currently being confronted, stressed how useful and important it had proven to elect the President of the General Assembly and the Chairs of the Main Committees three months before the beginning of the session. He noted with concern the problems currently being encountered in the selection of Main Committee Chairs for the upcoming session and urged Member States to do their utmost to resolve them as expeditiously as possible.

72. In the last part of the meeting, nine delegations gave prepared remarks covering many aspects of the issues examined. One group began by focusing on the great expansion in the role and activities of the President, noting that this implied that “many expenses [were] taken in charge by the country of origin of the President. This put an extra burden on many countries with limited resources which [could] not afford such [costs], thus creating the risk of inequality of Member States when considering candidature for the post of President of the General Assembly.” Regretting that Presidents had had to rely “heavily on voluntary contributions”, This group did, however, note with satisfaction that contributions had recently been made to the Trust Fund. On staffing, while strongly supporting the “assignment of additional posts on a permanent basis”, the group also insisted that the geographical balance of the staff be reflective of the membership. It also underscored the importance it attached to ensuring “successful annual transitions”. Another group, agreeing that it was “important to clearly understand the evolution and present scope of the function” of the President of the General Assembly, suggested a study by which “the Secretariat might help the membership in this regard by outlining the existing legal and procedural framework, as well as the practice”.

73. Regarding costs, one delegation felt firmly that “with many Member States still confronting dire economies, the timing [was] not appropriate to increase the staffing or budget of the Office of the President”. It encouraged Member States to focus on the Trust Fund instead, contributing to it “to ensure that it is commensurate with the President’s activities”. Another speaker, recalling firmly that the Fifth Committee and ACABQ were the rightful venues of any discussions on such issues, insisted that the Working Group should instead “focus on the use of the precious resources already provided”. Yet another, while willing to “explore supporting the Office of the President but within existing resources”, urged “careful identification of essential needs”.

74. One group focused significantly on a number of best practices, encouraging briefings by the President of the General Assembly on his recent activities and travels, as well as periodic meetings between the Presidents of the principal organs and smooth transitions between presidencies. It was specifically supportive of initiatives such as “The PGA Handbook” and the Revitalization Retreat. In the same vein, it urged that “a dedicated section on ...revitalization be established as part of the website of the President of the General Assembly”, and it also supported “the idea of implementing a comprehensive computerized documenting and archiving system”.

75. In his concluding remarks, the Chair mentioned that the discussions reflected the importance of strengthening the institutional memory of the Office of the PGA, and the need to ensure continuity and transparency in its work. He also noted the calls to increase the financial resources allocated to the Office of the President of the General Assembly “through the fifth committee”. The Chair further highlighted the importance of interaction between the Office of the PGA and the Office of the Presidents of the ECOSOC and the Security Council, as well as with the Executive Office of the Secretary General.

III. Conclusions

76. In accordance with its mandate, the Working Group endeavoured to identify key issues of concern and possible consensus, to examine the current status of implementation of those issues, and to either take action or indicate possible further action to be taken on them.

77. At its final meeting, held on 25 July 2013, the Working Group considered and adopted a draft resolution (see paragraph 79 below) and the present report.

ANNEX I:

Updated Inventory Chart of General Assembly resolutions on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly issued pursuant to resolution 66/294

Explanatory Note by the Chair of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Revitalization of the Work of the General Assembly (67th Session)

1. In accordance with operative paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 66/294, by which the General Assembly decided that “the Ad Hoc Working Group shall continue its review of the inventory of General Assembly resolutions on revitalization annexed to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group submitted at the sixty-third session, and, as a result, issue an updated version of the inventory to be attached to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group at the sixty-seventh session”, the Chair, assisted by the Secretariat, has prepared the updated inventory/chart for consideration by Member States.
2. The present inventory/chart has been updated to reflect the progress achieved during the intermediary sessions (from the sixty-third to the sixty-seventh sessions), which is indicated in bold.
3. The Chair, assisted by the Secretariat, obtained updated information, where possible, from relevant entities responsible for implementation, in addition to the information provided in the related reports by the Secretary General.
4. In order to streamline the inventory/chart and make it more user-friendly for Member States, the Chair has taken the following actions:
 - a) The commentary section that was included in the inventory of the sixty-third session was removed, and the comments included in it (only 3 comments) were consolidated in the comments section in italic, in order to reduce the number of columns in the inventory.
 - b) The repetitive provisions were consolidated into one provision, with indication of the references to each related resolution, to avoid duplication and redundancy.
 - c) The Chart was restructured, for the sake of consistency, according to the General Assembly’s latest resolutions on revitalization by rearranging the clusters and their corresponding paragraphs, without changing the substance.
5. The updated inventory/chart was split into two parts as follows:
 - a) The first part: contains the unimplemented provisions, in order to focus on their follow up.
 - b) The second part: contains the implemented provisions, both those that required one-time action and those with ongoing implementation, in order to keep track of previous achievements and provide the means to compare and learn from past experience.
6. In practical terms, the updated inventory/chart shall provide clear evidence of ongoing progress and signal the opportunities for further progress.
7. The inventory/chart does not have a definite character and may be amended at any time by Member States through the Ad Hoc Working Group on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly. Furthermore, it is not intended to, and does not, constitute any legal effect. It should only serve as a tool to facilitate the discussions on the follow up to the implementation of the previous related resolutions.

ANNEX II:

NON-PAPER

Enhancing the coordination of the scheduling of high-level meetings at the United Nations

1. In his opening remarks to the meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly on April 2nd, 2013, the Chair suggested exploring the possibility of having one week during the months of March, or April or May dedicated to high-level meetings, instead of concentrating those debates during the week of the GA high-level segment in September, noting that this would address both the burden of the compressed schedule in September and the need to spread those meetings across the session, where the problem of the level of participation may arise. Several delegations asked for further information on this proposal. This non-paper has been prepared in accordance with this request.
2. There are three types of High Level Meetings during the High level Segment in September and/or across the GA session:
 - a) High-level Meetings of the General Assembly convened according to GA resolutions¹⁰.
 - b) High-level Thematic debates convened by the President of the General Assembly¹¹.
 - c) High-level Meetings convened upon the initiative of the Secretary-General¹².
3. In resolution 66/294, the General Assembly, noting with appreciation that the high-level meetings held at the United Nations give more visibility to very important topics, and mindful of the need to facilitate full participation of all Member States and to preserve the integrity of the general debate in September, reiterated its invitation to the Secretary-General, the President of the General Assembly and the Chairs of the Main Committees, in consultation with Member States, "to enhance the coordination of the scheduling of high level meetings with a view to optimizing the number and distribution of such events" (OP20).¹³
4. The practice of holding thematic debates goes back to resolution 59/313 in which the Assembly decided "to convene and organize major thematic debates in order to establish broad international understanding on current substantive issues of importance to Member States", and authorized the President of the General Assembly "to propose interactive debates on current issues on the agenda of the Assembly, in consultation with Member States." The practice of holding thematic debates has evolved over time, as reflected in subsequent resolutions on General Assembly revitalization. Most recently, operative paragraph 7 of resolution 66/294 invited "the President of the General Assembly to continue this practice and to consult with Member States on the possibilities for achieving, where appropriate, results-oriented outcomes in such debates."
5. With a view to enhancing the coordination of the scheduling of high-level meetings at the United Nations, the AHWG may wish to consider further exploring the option of encouraging the General Assembly to schedule future high-level meetings during the spring (in the upcoming resolution on revitalization), taking into account the calendar of conferences, and without prejudice to the current practices of convening high-level meetings in September at the beginning of each GA session, and convening high-level thematic debates throughout the session, as appropriate.

¹¹ Example of a recent high-level thematic debate convened by the President of the General Assembly: HL Thematic Debate on the peaceful resolution of conflicts in Africa on 25 April 2013.

¹² Example of a recent high-level meeting convened upon the initiative of the Secretary-General: HLM on Countering Nuclear Terrorism on 28 September 2012.

¹³ See also OP16 of resolution 65/315

ANNEX III:BACKGROUND NOTE*Rotation pattern for the election of the Chairs of the six Main Committees

1. The General Assembly's rules of procedure (RoP) provide for the election by the Assembly of a President, 21 Vice-Presidents and Chairs of the six Main Committees for each session of the General Assembly, who together constitute the General Committee. In accordance with the RoP, these shall be elected "at least three months before the opening of the session over which they are to preside." Subsequent resolutions by the General Assembly on the revitalization of its work have underlined the importance of the early election of these officials in order to facilitate planning, preparation and the exchange of lessons learned from one session to the next.
2. The membership of the United Nations is organized in informal regional groups. While their respective level of coordination and organization differs from one group to another, they play an important role for electoral purposes in the General Assembly where they generally form the basis for the distribution of seats. There are currently five regional groups in the United Nations, which are the following: African States; Asia-Pacific States; Eastern European States; Latin American and Caribbean States; Western European and other States.
3. Given that there are five regional groups and six (formerly seven) Main Committees, the question has arisen, in the past, as to the rotation of the sixth chairmanship every session, and the General Assembly has provided clarity on this issue by adopting resolutions spelling out a specific rotational pattern for the election of the Main Committee Chairs. The latest such guidance can be found in resolution 48/264 of 29 July 1994, adopted under the item GA revitalization, in which the Assembly stipulated that, as of the forty-ninth session, the Main Committee Chairs shall be elected from among one representative from each regional group, and that the sixth chairmanship shall rotate over a period of twenty sessions, according to a rotational pattern, from among the African, Asian and Latin American and Caribbean States (annex II of resolution 48/264). By the same resolution, the Assembly also decided to replace paragraph 4 of the annex to resolution 33/138 with the text contained in its annex II which is also reflected in a footnote to rule 30 of the RoP. The rotational pattern currently in place will, therefore, expire with the 68th session.
4. While the pattern outlined in resolution 48/264 continues to apply in the elections of the Main Committee Chairs for the 68th session, the question has arisen concerning the replacement or continuation of the pattern in the elections for the 69th and future sessions. In accordance with the RoP, and relevant resolutions of the General Assembly on the revitalization of its work, the elections for the Main Committee Chairs of the 69th session should be held not later than 16 June 2014 (at least three months before the opening of the session), that is in the course of the resumed part of the 68th session. In other words, this issue would have to be addressed either in the AHWG during the 67th session or alternatively, if not during the current session, at an early stage during the 68th session.
5. During the Ad Hoc Working Group on GA revitalization's (AHWG) first meeting at the 67th session, held on 2 April 2013, a group of Member States pointed out "the necessity to streamline the current arrangements for formation of the Bureaus of the Main Committees to make the rotation scheme more transparent and predictable", adding that it "would welcome further discussions and practical proposals on this matter."
6. In light of the above, the AHWG could discuss this issue, and explore the possibility of reaching a decision during the current session.

ANNEX IV:

Proposal by the Delegation of Belarus
On the Draft Guidelines on Election of Chairs and Rapporteurs of the Main Committees of the United Nations General Assembly *

1. The allocation of chairmanships of the Main Committees of the General Assembly shall be determined by the regional groups with facilitation and coordination by the President of the General Assembly at least seven months before the opening of the next session of the General Assembly on the basis of the principle of orderly and predictable regional rotation of chairmanships of the Main Committees among the regional groups in accordance with the following pattern:

- (a) a representative from an African State;
- (b) a representative from an Asian State;
- (c) a representative from an Eastern European State;
- (d) a representative from a Latin American or Caribbean State;
- (e) a representative from a Western European or other State;
- (f) the sixth chairmanship shall rotate among the regional groups within the seven-year cycle according to the following pattern:

(a) – (c) – (b) – (d) – (a) – (e) – (b).

2. The decision on switching or waiving the chairmanship of a Main Committee shall be taken by the regional groups involved in coordination with the President of the General Assembly. Such decision shall not affect the general pattern of allocation of chairmanships of the Main Committees among the regional groups for consecutive sessions.

3. The regional groups shall refrain from announcing and endorsing their candidates to the bureaux of the Main Committees for the next session of the General Assembly before the allocation of chairmanships of the Main Committees has been finalized by the regional groups and announced by the President of the General Assembly.

4. A rapporteur of a Main Committee shall be elected from the regional group that held the chairmanship of the Committee at the previous session, ensuring hereby the institutional memory of the Committee.

* Consultations were organized to consider the proposal. The Ad Hoc Working Group was not able to agree on these draft guidelines during the sixty-seventh session.
